

You've taken an important step in diverting recyclables from the landfill, and in allowing recycled materials to be turned into new products. However, that's where many people think the cycle ends. But, you're leaving out another important step - buying recycled.

Buying recycled is nearly as important as the physical act of recycling itself. For recycling to keep working, you need to purchase new products and packaging made from recycled materials. You need to finish what you started and buy recycled products.
